D'Annunzio Flies Away Into Exile; Deserts His City

Hostilities Between Legionaries and Regular Troops Cease; Complete Recognition Is Given to Treaty of Rapallo.

(By Associated Press)
Triest, Dec. 30.—Hostilities at Fiume between Italian regular troops and D'Annunzian legionaries ended tonight. The agreement for the capitulation of Fiume will be signed tomorrow morning.

Orders for a cessation of fighting at Fiume apparently followed a report to General Cavaglia, commander of Italian regulars, that the council of Fiume, to which Captain d'Annunzio had turned over his powers, had accepted the terms of the Italian government.

At a conference at Abbazia yesterday, the council of the city of Trieste, Italy, voted to accept the complete recognition of the treaty of Rapallo, against the application of which D'Annunzio and his men were fighting, and signed an agreement for the capitulation of the city.

REVISED TAX IS LEGISLATIVE TASK

Initiative and Referendum to Receive Attention of Blaine.

Madison.—The initiative and referendum, tax and unemployment subjects that will receive early attention from the legislature after it convenes, judging from expressed plans of legislators, Charles McCarthy, director of the legislative library, says. Bills have already been drawn embodying proposed methods of dealing with the problems raised. The plan for the initiative and referendum generally suggested is a Wisconsin plan. Mr. McCarthy said it would provide that citizens might petition for consideration of a bill that had been defeated either in the legislature or by 70 per cent of the voters. The bill would be introduced and allowed to lie without being brought to a vote. There would be no direct initiative, but the subject would first have to be brought into the legislature.

Blaine is Originator. Governor Blaine was one of the originators of this plan, and is called for by the republican and non-partisan league platforms to which the governor-elect is pledged. McCarthy said that while there has been no direct levy of taxes for operation of the government for several years, Mr. McCarthy said that legislators were likely to call for a sharp reduction in expenditures and a reduction in the methods of raising money. Farmers are said to be dissatisfied and are calling for a curtailment of taxes. The general feeling of the high cost of living has brought forward suggestions which, in the opinion of Mr. McCarthy, will prove futile because of the inability of one state to cope with the problems raised. There was said to be a friendly feeling of friendship toward the division of the state into two parts, but it was said to be a friendly feeling of friendship toward the division of the state into two parts, but it was said to be a friendly feeling of friendship toward the division of the state into two parts.

It is not possible to determine the temper of the coming legislature from the bills that have been suggested thus far, but it is probable that there will be a number of radical suggestions, but these, he said, are to be expected at every session.

YOUTH WHO JUMPED COMMITMENT HERE CAUGHT IN BELOIT

Joe Anderson, 17, who this morning was being sent to Beloit for a year, was caught in the Rock county jail for jumping his commitment parole.

He was brought here last night from Beloit where he was taken in custody.

Anderson was sentenced to jail for 90 days for vagrancy. He was picked up in a petty larceny case and a revolver was found in his room. The charge against him however was being a vagrant. When brought to the jail here he was paroled out on the farm of John Manger, south of this city. Evidently Anderson didn't like farm work for the reason that he was picked up by the Beloit police and brought back by Sheriff Fred Hale to report in jail.

The youth said he was trying to get enough money to get back although his parole term is not completed.

ROTARY CLUB TO WORK FOR MORE SKATING RINKS

The local Rotary club at their "Ladies' Night" meeting last evening, elected Supt. Frank O. Holt chairman of a committee of three to make plans for flooding the school grounds of the city for skating rinks.

Mr. Holt is to pick the other two and see the council concerning the matter. This decision was reached after some discussion by the members, the majority of them being in favor of having more places to skate. At present the "Y" rink, near the Five Points is the only one.

The feature of the evening, was a Christmas tree. Presents were given to the 80 members and women in attendance. Fred Sheldon played the part of Santa and passed out the gifts. Dean J. P. Ryan was the speaker of the evening, giving a humorous talk on "How the Rotary Spirit Fits in with the Christmas Spirit." Features of the dinner were wheel-shaped cakes and a large wheel of ice-cream donated by Charles Toulon of the Shortell company.

Christmas and New Year's greetings were received by local Rotarians from Bakers "Post" Snodgrass, International president of the Rotary club. The letter is addressed to "My Friends, the Rotarians of Janesville" and wishes the members a Merry Christmas and wishes the New Year "may bring to you and yours a full measure of life's richest blessings."

Never in the history of the country have there been many bond buyers as at present. During the war when the Government sold the different issues of Liberty bonds the people learned what bonds are and the same people are now buying municipals.

A Municipal Bond is a ahead of every other form of debt except Government bond. Our list, sent on request, very complete.

There could be no mistake. It was that sudden, explosive cough which punctuated Drake's voice at intervals and was part hiccup; the single stomach cough of the heavy drinker caused as I felt the cold air of the pathos of the situation. The cough seemed to belong to him, like his amorphous alcoholic voice and restless eyes. Sometimes, especially when he was standing in the glare of the sun, it became part sneeze.

End had recognized it, too, and her hand gripped my knee as she turned to look at him. Drake here on Treacher? It was incredible. Impossible. Outrageous. How had he got there? And why? I had not seen him for so long. He had not been to our feet and were standing in the full blaze of the moon and Drake was bounding to his feet at the moment he rounded the spur of rock. There was really but one thing to do, and that was to rush him the instant he appeared and shut him over the edge. This time I had no qualms. Drake had tried his best to slay me in the cave and had wounded End and now here he was back again like a prowling beast. I flashed through my mind that he had probably decided to run back and reconnoiter the situation and approaching Treacher on the seaward side of the mole he had landed in one of the several coves and climbed up through a fissure to the ledge.

At any rate, here he was and this time I did not intend to take any chances. Man to man I realized that I stood no show with Drake's great strength. Let him grip me once and the game was up for all that I might be able to accomplish. The best that I could hope for lay in taking him by surprise and rushing him over the brink before he realized what was afoot. If in doing this he managed to bring me down, I would not mind it so much the worse, but at any rate End would be safe in the care of Charley Dollar and the fighting man of Kilauea.

This was the swift framing of the situation in my mind as I stood there tense and set behind the rocky buttress and waited for Drake to appear. He came snuffling along very noisily for a person making a reconnaissance and the soft quiet of the night augmented the sounds. I waited until they would have been lost in the deep diapason coming up from below, but the sea was so still and the swell so long that there was no sound of waves breaking on the shore of the cliffs. Sucking, gurgling sounds like giant babies profiting by their nap. And there were little hissing sounds like the hiss of steam on the sheer wall without breaking, filled the myriad crevices and then retreated, leaving them to drain before the next hiss of steam came again. Drake's wheezing breath and staccato bark out through these fluid sounds with a sort of challenge, like a pig rooting for worms in the silent hours. But he had more right to puff than the Pacific compressing air in the pockets of the cliffs. There was a sort of vulgar, profane, in the way he slurred and slurred, though he considered himself to be the vitalized essence of large elemental forces and estimated that it would take at least a few million square feet of sea and all therein contained to boil down the crystallized essence of a Channing Drake.

"Here you go back to your solution again, old boy," said I to myself, as I listened to his approach. The sounds of this ceased presently and I might have been taken napping but for End. She scuffled with her feet and then pointed, and I saw Drake's face peering at me around the corner of the rock. It gave me the impression of a slanting nose and black hair crowding his eyebrows nearly together, a deep wrinkle above the latter, like the care worn physiognomy of a man who knows what his expression could have been like but Drake showed startled terror and I believe that if he had not been so drunk he would have turned and bolted. But I was the first to act and realizing that he must not be given time to draw I spun around the rock and let my hand fall with my fist. The blow landed fairly well but scarcely as much as staggered him. He growled like a bear and tried to clutch but I dodged his rush and struck again, landing this time on the heavy muscles of his neck.

The ledge at this point was about thirty feet wide, sloping slightly downwards and outwards with a clear drop from its brink into the sea beneath. Its floor was fairly smooth though irregular. It was not the place which one would choose for a sparring bout and as we circled, Drake watching me warily, I had to be careful of my footing. I wondered that he did not draw his big revolver. It is probable that the holster below was stiff and he did not dare lower his guard for my I might get in a jab that would drop him, or perhaps he did not wish to give the alarm, not knowing what what there might be a gun on the ledge.

Three times I sprang in and struck and avoided his clinch. He did not run after me. All he did was to grab when I struck and then let me go. He was slow. I wonder to this day why he did not try to use his fists. Perhaps he had never learned how. But it was quickly evident to me that I was not able to accomplish much. The man was too heavy of bone to suffer much from the blows of a lean, wiry chap like myself and as for taking him over or even down that seemed hopeless.

I was beginning to wonder how the business would end, wishing that I could take the offensive and rush me, when a white figure slipped around the rock, directly behind him. He was leaning slightly forward as he came and I saw that he was next lead and his weight was well on the balls of his feet. I was facing him, my back to the ledge and about to jump in and strike. But before I could accomplish this End sprang forward and dropping her hands on Drake's shoulder blades thrust him into the sea. Drake was heeled and he could not recover himself; could not check. A child catching a grown person in this tottering condition could run him along for a little distance and End was a solid and vigorous. Besides, the sloping ground was in her favor and before Drake could regain his equilibrium or even stagger he had him falling over the air upon the brink. It would have been ridiculous but for the awfulness of it; but Drake hustled flappingly over the edge and landed on the precipice and howling, his great arms tossing frantically about. And then a final shove, a despairing yell, and the abyss absorbed him.

When Billy Whiskers settled in Farmerville he fully expected to end his days in that quiet little community where he had a good home, plenty to eat, many friends and enjoyed the reputation of being the wisest of the animals at Cloverleaf Farm.

Billy, in after years, when he looked back on his childhood, when the stories of his earlier life, used to say that the day at the circus and those that followed were the most exciting and interesting of his life, and although he was asked to repeat the story very often he generally refused, keeping it for special occasions like birthdays, Fourth of July, Thanksgiving or Christmas. He said it told too often it would become an old story and all the kids in time would begin to regard the grand old father and his tales as just the same old story who was forever telling the same thing over and over again.

Billy Whiskers, who was a very wise, old fellow, knew that good stories are just like good clothes or anything else choice, that in order to keep them good, they must not be brought out every day.

Billy Whiskers was a very remarkable goat, larger and stronger than others, with a beautiful white coat that was clean and soft and was the color of ivory and shone like silk. His horns, too, always attracted attention, they were so long and shiny. He could jump higher and jump higher and butt harder than any goat he ever met in all his travels, so that wherever Billy went he very soon became a leader, thought he often had to fight before the other goats found out that they had better mind than take the consequences of disobedience.

He was saved from being a bully, conceited and cruel by a kind heart and sunny disposition. As soon as he succeeded in establishing his right to leadership, instead of abusing his power, he used it to help the weak and help the weak, kindly look after the little kids and always see that the goats were fed before he ate himself.

It was a sorry day for any dog who bothered the flock when Billy Whiskers was around. Many a one went howling home at night, and when with him. Small boys, too, learned to be afraid of him.

PLAY WORK HOME

BOYS PRODUCE OPERAS IN HOME TOY THEATRE

London, England.—Adrian Wells Beecham, a son of Sir Thomas Beecham, and grandson of Great Britain's famous toy manufacturer, will soon produce his first opera, that he is only fifteen years old. He has been actively engaged in this work for some time and already written two operas, two symphonies and a ballet.

His younger brother, who is eleven, also is a musical prodigy. He has painted scenes for a toy theater which have been used with dramatic effect in connection with the compositions of his brother.

"We see by the 'Castle News,'" says the editor of the "Oracle," Bangor High School, Bangor, Me., "that the Senator entertained in honor of the Freshmen. It must have been an enjoyable party."

"Here is another letter that makes me happy," says Peterson of Buffalo, N. Y. "I would rather have than a thousand dollars."

"I have seen everything in this world. There is many a big hearted, rich man who would give all he has to get away from the city and live in the country with some healthy people as Peterson's Ointment, to sell at all drug stores."

Read this letter, written February 14, 1918, by Mrs. Albert Southcott, of Buffalo, N. Y. "I know it because I get similar letters from all over the world. I know it because I am happy."

"I was an untold sufferer from an old running sore and ulcers. I had tried many remedies without any relief from pain. A friend told me of your wonderful ointment and the first box took away the pain that had not left me before in years, and after using just nine dollars' worth of the Peterson's Ointment, I am a free man. I can walk. Never, never will I be without a box of Peterson's Ointment. You may use this to recommend your ointment if you wish. I cannot say enough for it. I am happy."

Don't you like to hear the wind whistling around the house, father?"

"I don't care about it particularly, John."

"Oh, pshaw!"

"But, as between hearing the wind whistle and that fat-headed young Dubson honking his automobile horn for me to come out, I'd infinitely prefer the wind."

"How are you getting on?"

"Pretty well, thank you," answered Stimson.

"How are you getting on?"

"I've something to say to you—you have to keep your eyes open now."

"How is that?" queried Jones.
